School of Pharmacy Launches 'Helping Hands' Initiative

Faculty, staff, students, trainees, and alumni share stories about how they are stepping up to assist family, friends, colleagues, and their communities during the COVID-19 pandemic.

BY MALISSA CARROLL

APRIL 20, 2020

A leader in pharmacy education, scientific discovery, patient care, and community engagement across the state of Maryland and beyond, the University of Maryland School of Pharmacy is stepping up during the COVID-19 pandemic, as colleagues across the School help each other navigate distance learning and teleworking and assist their local communities in a variety of ways.

The School of Pharmacy recently launched the "Helping Hands" initiative, which shares stories highlighting how faculty, staff, students, trainees, and alumni have reached out to support their family and friends, colleagues, and communities, and offers an opportunity for individuals to give kudos to SHARE

University of Maryland
of Maryland
School of Pharmacy

Publications

Inside SOP Blog

University News

Media Mentions

NEWS CENTER

Submit a Story

If you have a story that you wish to share, or want to give kudos to a colleague, please complete and submit the online form.

Related News Stories

New Guide Helps Clinicians Optimize Medication Management During COVID-19 Pandemic

APRIL 30, 2020

More Stories About:

Coronavirus   COVID-19   Helping Hands   Volunteering