This was a wacky week.

Was anyone else as depressed as me when we were reminded yet again there are no snow days in mandatory telework? Bummer.

A couple of quick things:

Shout out to Tara for the facts cited in Dr. Jarrell's pandemic letter this week from her column on the 1918 Flu published.

REMEMBER -

Love Data Week - <https://www2.hshsl.umaryland.edu/hslupdates/?p=4601> starts Monday and we will be launching our Center for Data and Bioinformation Services. Sign up and attend our festive grand opening at 12:30 on Monday. I am going to crack a bottle of champagne over my computer (only kidding CATS).

I am seriously thinking about a special April Fool's Day edition of Connective Issues – if you are interested in exploring an idea that might get us all fired, let me know and I will include you in the meeting. 😊

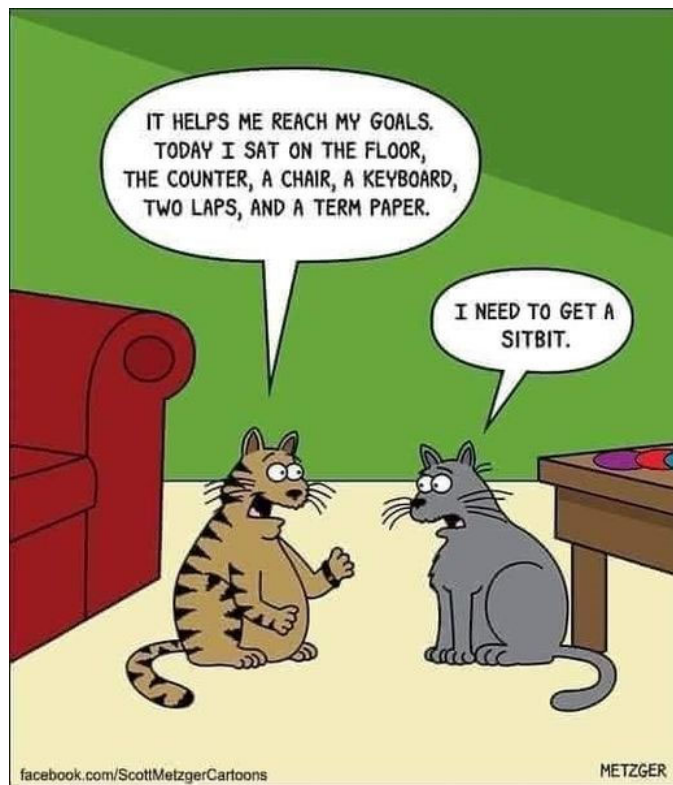

Thanks to the small but enthusiastic group that joined me for my non-mandatory office hour. Stop in and say hi. If you have questions, send them to me in advance or bring them to the meeting and watch me make up answers. This week we did touch on what it would mean to "reopen" and would we all come back at once? My answer? "I don't know." I shrugged too. Maybe I will do better next week.

For your weekend reading in preparation for the Super Bowl: The True History and Swashbuckling Myth Behind the Tampa Bay Buccaneers' Namesake:

And some humor:

I ASKED THE LIBRARIAN IF THE
LIBRARY HAD ANY BOOKS
ABOUT PARANOIA.

SHE WHISPERED: "THEY'RE RIGHT BEHIND YOU..."

Have a grand weekend!
Stay safe and well -
